

Meet New Redevelopment Committee Chair - Patrick Miles

In the uncertain post-pandemic economy, one thing will still be essential — the necessity of a vital community asset with the flexibility to meet community needs, the ability to help drive economic recovery and a plan to realize its future possibilities. Visionary leadership is also necessary to ensure that an asset like the Alliant Energy Center achieves its full potential.

Dane County Supervisor Patrick Miles, the new chair of the Alliant Energy Center Redevelopment Committee, is uniquely qualified to help guide the expansion and renovation plans for the Center. During his time representing the 34th District on the County Board— an area that includes McFarland and the town of Dunn — Supervisor Miles has been a leader in economic development, land management and finances.

During Kathleen Falk’s tenure as County Executive, Miles helped establish the County Board’s first Economic Development Committee. Later, he chaired the county’s Zoning and Plan Committee and currently chairs the Personnel and Finance Committee. He recognizes the importance of the Alliant Energy Center to the area’s economy and quality of life, shares the vision for its future and has the leadership experience to help shepherd its redevelopment.

“There is a need for thoughtful planning so we’re not locking ourselves in a corner, but keeping doors open to opportunities to improve and expand campus value and functionality.”
